4. Build your personalised conference schedule online

Make the most of your participation at Going Global 2017, and the opportunity to engage with more than 1,200 leaders of international tertiary education from across 80 countries. Use the Going Global interactive tools to schedule your preferred sessions and book one to one meetings with fellow delegates. These interactive tools will be available here on the online registration form from 7 April 2017 until 8 May 2017.

After this date all your pre-scheduled sessions and meetings will move to the conference app, where you can continue to build your personalised schedule.

I would like to use Going Global interactive tools. Yes / No

5. Download the conference app for free

Going Global interactive tools will become available on the app when they close online on 10 May 2017. Our conference app will keep you up to date and connected to all of the activities taking place:

- view the agenda and manage your session bookings,
- continue to book your one to one meetings with fellow delegates,
- access speaker profiles, interactive voting,
- explore posters and their presenters and capture content via QR codes.

App download instructions will be sent to participants in early May 2017.

If you are unable to bring your own mobile device, the Going Global team can provide you with an iPad on loan for the duration of the conference so that you will be able to view the conference programme and participate in interactive sessions. You can pick up your loan iPad at the SpotMe desks when you arrive at the venue.

Participants who do not return their Going Global mobile device are liable for replacement costs (£400 per device).

7. Going Global Publication

Building nations, connecting cultures - Policy, Economic Development and Engagement – international tertiary education for the global good

Volume 6, Edited by Mary Stiasny and Tim Gore

The British Council and UCL IOE Press are proud to present Volume 6 in the series entitled Going Global. Building from the key 2016 conference themes of education policy, economic development and engagement, this sixth volume in the series considers the role of tertiary education in nation-building as well as the importance of international engagement and initiatives that demonstrate the strength of higher education's cross-border networks and their unique contribution to a shared sustainable future.

The book captures the important debates and lessons learned from Going Global 2016 for researchers, policymakers and tertiary education practitioners to use in developing these conversations further, and as guidance for applying and advancing these ideas within their own institutional and policy settings.

Edited by Mary Stiasny and Tim Gore of the University of London, the book arises from the presentations, discussions and panel sessions held at the Going Global conference that took place in Cape Town, South Africa in May 2016. This is the first time the conference had been held on the African continent and it was attended by more than 800 world leaders in international education.

One complimentary copy of the publication will be included in your conference bag.

8. PC01. Fringe session: English and language policy in HE internationalisation

Date: Thursday 25th May

Time: 09.30 – 16.30

Location: central London venue, to be confirmed

Cost: N/A

With increasing global movement of students and staff from different language backgrounds between international universities, the issue of language policy may be expected to be near the top of the agenda of industry leaders. The rapid increase of English-medium education in non-traditional contexts has brought this issue into focus.

Inadequate or inappropriate language policies in the academic and administrative domains of universities bring a range of risks, including; less effective teaching, reduced learning outcomes, ineffective staff and student recruitment, reduced research output, challenges towards equity and linguistic rights, and the personal wellbeing of students and staff. However, despite these risks a clear and explicit language policy at institutional level remains the exception rather than the rule.

This one day symposium aims to provide an opportunity for experts and leaders from UK and international higher education institutions to share their experience, good practice and the challenges faced in the development and implementation of appropriate, effective and fair higher education language policies.

Through a combination of case-study presentation from researchers and practitioners, and open conversation, participants will reflect and gain insight into international good practice in higher education language policy development.

9. PC02. Fringe session: Rise of global campuses: impact on quality assurance

Date: Monday 22nd May

Time: 09.00 - 12.00

Location: UG 09, British Council, 10 Spring Gardens, London, SW1A 2BN

Host: QAA and KHDA

The expansion of the higher education sector through internationalisation activities is quite evident over the last decade or so.

More recently, there has been significant growth in the number of multi-city or global institutions. These are institutions that operate campuses in multiple jurisdictions. This has created several challenges for both institutions and Quality Assurance agencies as students, faculty and curriculum move around from one campus location to another.

It is important that both the institutions and the Quality Assurance agencies respond effectively to this expansion and change and address the challenges that have arisen through internationalisation. One way to do this is to have greater dialogue and co-operation between all stakeholders. As institutions expand into multiple jurisdictions, it is vital that the agencies from sending and receiving countries engage with each other and find means for co-operation and collaboration. The student voice is an integral part of this too, ultimately, agencies and institutions have to work together to ensure quality of their degrees, freedom in the form of mobility and projection through recognition of their qualifications. Quality Beyond Boundaries Group (QBBG) is an example of improving cooperative quality assurance of international education, and through this workshop, we will give delegates the opportunity to respond to and contribute to the discussion of this very interesting phenomenon in international higher education.
